★ The 39 Steps

Alfred Hitchcock's mid-thirties film about counterespionage. Museum of History and Industry, Thurs January 26 at 7:30 pm.

★ The Abortion Diaries

This 30-minute documentary by Penny Lane is simply constructed: In conversations with women in their homes and around a dinner table, Lane asks them about their abortions. Some women tell stories about so-called "crisis pregnancy centers" and dangerous illegal procedures in developing countries, but mostly they talk about going to school and escaping loser boyfriends and using birth control. The movie is clear-eyed and surprisingly compelling (though I could have done without the twee zine-style intertitles about guilt and mothers and other topics that the interviewees weren't actually bringing up). It's the kind of thing you'd like to force Hillary "sad, even tragic" Clinton to watch. Not to mention Sam Allto. (ANNIE WAGNER) 911 Media Arts, Wed Jan 25 at 8 pm.

★ The Aristocrats

In The Aristocrats, a film co-directed by Paul Provenza and Penn Jillette, dozens of legendary (and sub-legendary) comedians tell variations on the dirtiest joke in the world. At least, that's what the movie pretends to be. In the end, the joke is just a vehicle for allowing these humormongers the opportunity to flex muscles their entertainment careers seldom allow them
